Sperm SNATCHERS

A recent survey revealed that 42 per cent of women would be about using contraception in order to get pregnant in spite of their partners' wishes.

A growing trend of women are desperate to get pregnant and will go to any lengths to become a mum.

Caution: Men might want to cover their family bits before reading on...

During my clinic, many girlfriends have told me how they have tricked their boyfriend or fiancé or husband. One friend has self-abortion in her 4th, so she had to a very new boyfriend that she was on the pill. He is now in a new relationship having to pay support for a child he never saw!

Another friend was engaged but her fiancé walked out on her. She is 35, and told me she was hoping she was pregnant 'so he would have to come back'. Her new partner is blinding ignorance of such tactics!

I used secret hormone injections to make myself more fertile. I also used a chastity belt (which I kept in the tea towel drawer to place my husband never looks at).

Neither of the men knew about my subterfuge. I imagine both would be furious. I will have days now when I wish the sperm that had tricked that I had a daughter or son my husband felt compelled to visit!

My sister was trying to get pregnant with her fiancé. She said: 'I really want a piece of work. I might even go part-time after that, maybe two days a week. He will just have to work harder.'

Believe it or not, but the women on this show are even worse. They're single and desperate want to be mums and they are NOT prepared to wait for Mr Right.

Beware: 'The invasion of the Sperm Snatchers' has begun, and we are going to help them!

 4. What is the test conclusion?

When something like an egg up the nose, there isn't a medical name, and therefore it's not the subject.

That's why I said, honestly, when the pregnancy hormones kicked in, I'm "doing the right thing".

And really, I mean I was right, and when I said I was in the army for the first time, I mean I did not. I mean I was just a girl.

Now I'm a little more confident. That's all I can say for now, up to the 100th day.

So I think you're looking forward to the end of thinking - and then, when you're in the house.

An outrageous TV reality dating format.

30 carefully selected women desperately want a baby. Despite the lack of interest in the men as a partner, the women do not settle for any man. They want the most successful one, the one who will, most likely, deliver top quality sperm. But the criteria to who will make the perfect choice will vary.

There is also a strict and diverse selection of terrible men. From unemployed creatives to successful businessmen. From athletic studs to overweight comic books. From gay partners to obsessive millionaires.

And so, the women will sign a contract that monetary child support will never be an option. As the money criteria are off the table.

Now, the men are NO easy preys. Even though willing to grant these women hungry predators their biggest wish, the men does need to be convinced that the woman of HIS choice will be the best possible mom she can be to HIS kid(s).

So, in a series of rounds of Q&A interviews and theme related assignments to impress the women, not just rate the potential dads. At the same time, the men get the chance to get an in-depth impression of the women. They get to interview them, they can spy on them through hidden camera's built in and out of the house, confront the women with their behaviors and even set specific challenges to see who is the best mom possible.

At the end of each episode, both the women and men rate the opposite sexes. The favorites stay. The man wanting the least, automatically providing the least desirable baby, has to go. The woman with the least score, allegedly being the worst mom material, is eliminated as well.

The men are NO easy preys. Even though willing to grant these women hungry predators their biggest wish, they too need to be convinced that the woman of HIS choice will be the best possible mom she can be to HIS kid(s).

So when is a woman most likely to become a sports mom? If her career is not panning out nearly as she thought it would. If she is 37 or over and childless. If she worries the men might walk out on her. I believe these are the women who are most likely to be persuaded into making the decision to get pregnant in whatever way they can.

Women today are used to getting what they want. They believe that "having it all" is their right, not a privilege. Women no longer think merely being "married" to their work is in any way satisfactory. Life without a child is seen as a failure.

'SHOULD CONCEPTION HAPPEN ARTIFICIALLY OR DO BOTH DECIDE TO TRY THE NATURAL WAY?'

Through a series of rounds and episodes the quest for top quality sperm continues. Who will be the most desirable donor? Who will make the best mom?

In the final, there will be a shocking plot. An unexpected guest here is revealed.

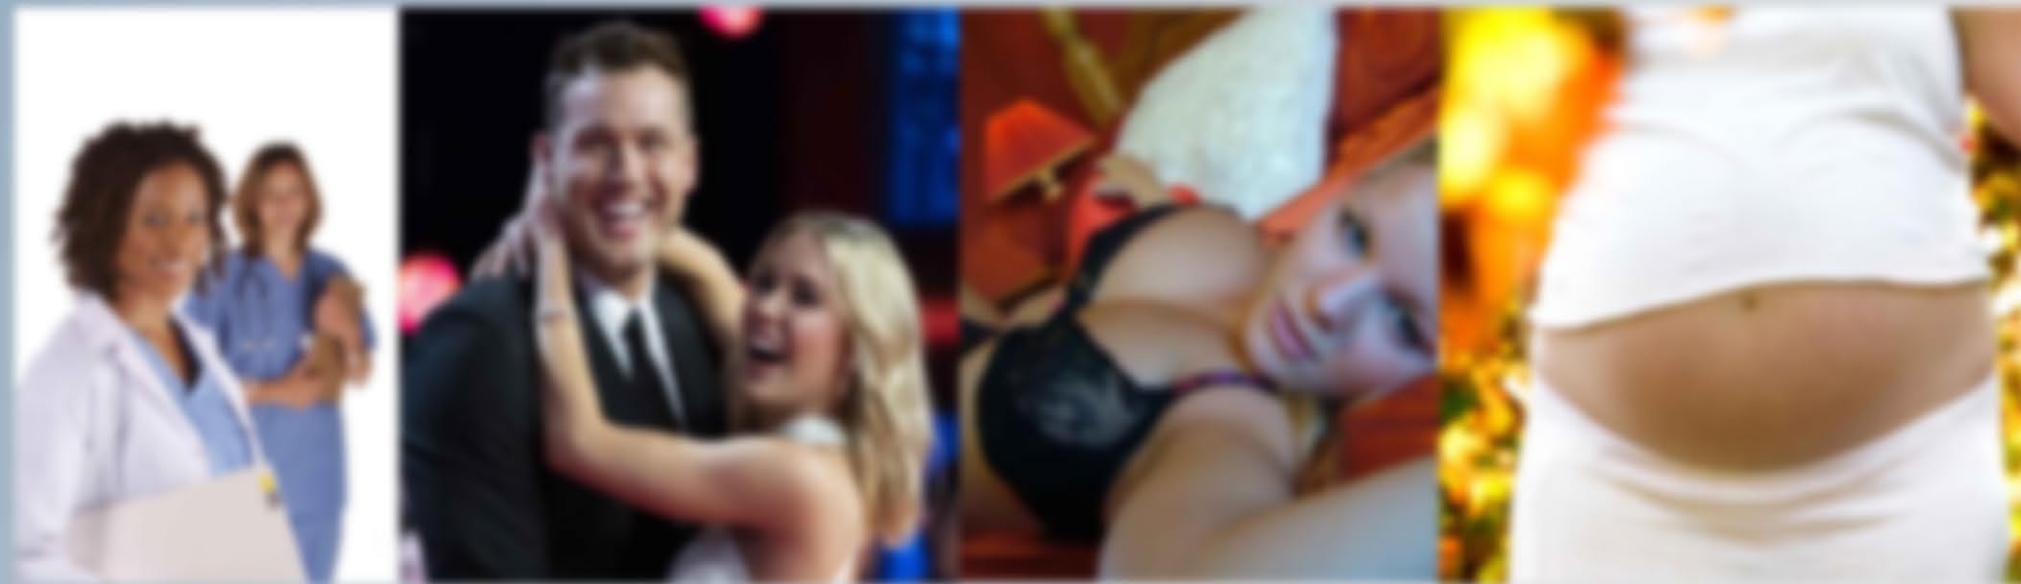

Remember there is a match, both the women and the guy need to answer a difficult ethical question before chosen donors. Do they want conception to happen artificially or do both decide to try the natural way?

If one (or both) of them choose 'artificially' then obviously this will happen. The success and/or results of the pregnancy will be revealed in the next season of 'Sperm Snatchers'.

BTW...

If both choose the natural way there might be more going on. Did 'Feelings' or even 'Love' get in the way of the pragmatic agreement we started with? And are opinions on IVF involving a husband and still be a great parent with the same?

The winner? Watch the next season of 'Sperm Snatchers'!
